

Who owns the city?

All of us!

What if the interests of the people of Bremen and Bremerhaven – regardless of their income, job and social background – were to decide the future course? Everyone's interests?

In that case, homes and property would no longer be in the hands of private investors. Rents would be affordable for everyone if the aim was not making a profit.

People who earn their living in the care, education or social services sectors should be able to live comfortably off their money. Collectively agreed wage tariffs and a minimum wage that would also lead to a decent pension would ensure this. Indefinitely extended, insecure temporary contracts would be a thing of the past – above all in publicly owned companies.

Good jobs and the promise of prosperity for everyone – is this in fact still possible in the future? Yes, but it won't be if we continue to put ourselves at the mercy of banks and corporations, as they are only interested in short-term profits. It will be if we invest in education, research and a competent state and guarantee that everyone can also find a new job later on in life, rather than be disregarded despite their valuable experience.

That is what we are committed to.

People who use the bus or the train would no longer need a ticket – free public transport is good for the environment and the climate, and everyone would be able to use it.

Enough schools and childcare facilities in all areas of the city? A new public company would build them. To make sure that all young adults receive vocational training, there would be a vocational training financing pool: businesses that offer vocational training would get a share, those that don't would have to contribute. Social cohesion only works if everyone is taken into account.

Immigration, a cosmopolitan attitude, diversity: they have always been the norm in port cities. This can work only with respect and solidarity. Bremen and Bremerhaven do not tolerate racism and mutual vilification.
